Fluid Stewardship in the ICU: The Rush to De-resuscitate

Session Date: 07/26/2022

Session Time: 11:00 – 11:45 AM (CST)

Target Audience

This continuing education (CE) session was planned to meet the needs of professional staff who deal with the selection and monitoring of medication(s) as part of their patient care duties, including pharmacists, RNs, APRNs, PAs, MDs.

Activity Overview

Intravenous fluids are the most common drugs administered in the intensive care unit and are routinely given for resuscitation of shock, maintenance of daily fluid requirements, and as carriers for drug administration. Due to their ubiquitous use, fluids are often not viewed as medications in and of themselves. Given the concern for iatrogenic fluid overload, which is associated with worse outcomes, recent studies have focused on new approaches to limit fluid accumulation in the critically ill. Fluid stewardship calls for an increased recognition that fluid therapy should be customized to patient specific needs through restrictive use and targeted de-resuscitation via active removal. This presentation will review current literature related to fluid stewardship in the critically ill to allow for the creation of evidence-based de-resuscitation strategies.

Learning Objectives

At the conclusion of this knowledge-based CE session, participants should be able to:

1. Identify adverse consequences of fluid overload in critically ill patients.
2. Summarize literature assessing the efficacy and safety of fluid stewardship strategies.
3. Generate patient-specific plans for fluid management based on available evidence.
